(C)

For thousands of the years, people used different ways to measure things. Some people used the size of their king's foot or hand to measure things. After the king died, they used the new king's foot, and so on. However, it was impossible (可能的) for people to know the exact size of a thing.

In 1584, the Dutch engineer Simon Stevenius started to think about a set of measures(度量单位)。The measures used the number ten. However, it was just an idea. No one was interested in his idea at that time. About two hundred years later, the French scientist created a new system of units, using his idea.

Around this time, the French scientists began to use metres to measure length and also worked out the length of a metre. They also decided to call a hundredth of a metre a centimeter and a thousand metres a kilometer.

根据短文内容，进行问题简答。

(54) What way did some people thousands of years ago to measure things?

(55) When did the French start to use metres?
