My name is Susan. I was lucky that I went to Canada last October. I stayed there for about 90 days. I went there on October 19th and came back on December 29th. I lived with a Canadian family, the Whites; they are very kind and friendly. Before long, we became good friends. I could practice speaking English with them every day. Sometimes, I taught them Chinese. They looked after my meals. So I had time to go to English class. The teachers there were nice. They taught us to listen, speak, read, and write in English. But it was mostly speaking. I found Canadian classes are a little different from our classes here. Sometimes you can sit anywhere you like in the classroom. We can learn from each other, and you can ask your teachers questions during the class. I really like this kind of class.

Questions:

1. What did Susan go to Canada for?
2. When did she come back from Canada?
3. Why did she like staying with the Whites?
4. Why did Susan have time to go to an English class?
5. What did Susan like best in the Canadian class?

A Living Fossil?

In 1938, a fishing boat caught a fish which was one meter fifty-two centimeters long off the coast of South Africa. The Captain had never seen a fish like it, so he took it back to a museum in East London. The fish was well known to scientists. Fossils had been found all over the world. It was a coelacanth. Scientists had believed that it had become extinct 80 million years before. However, no more were found until 1952 when one was seen for sale in a fish market in the Comoro Islands, near Madagascar. Between 1953 and 1955, six more were caught there. The fish that had been caught in 1938 must have been carried away from the Comoro Islands by an ocean current. Scientists later discovered that Comoro fishermen had been catching coelacanths for years. They simply hadn't known that coelacanths were rare.

Questions:

1. What did a fishing boat catch off the coast of South Africa in 1938?
2. Had the Captain ever seen a fish like that?
3. Was the fish sold at the market?
4. What did the Captain do about it?
5. What did scientists now about the fish?
6. Were more fish of this kind caught before 1955?
7. Does the story tell you why there could be the coelacanth that was caught in 1938 off the coast of South Africa?
